Belalp, Switzerland: Photographer Mark Menzies says: "This magical scene was taken while I stood chatting and drinking whisky with my good friend & colleague Daan. As we chatted about life, one of the workers from the lodge sledged past us with a headlamp to light his way. He lived further down the mountain and this was his transport home... such a different way of life here!"

Pu'u Hou, Mauna Kea, Hawaii: Pu`u is Hawaiian for hill or cinder cone. The cone is 13,460ft from sea level and is dotted with an array of the finest telescopes in the world. A snowboarder spoke to the photographer when he finished his decent of the volcano in the last rays of daylight, "This morning I surfed in five-foot waves at Pohoiki. My life is over, I've done everything now, I surfed and snowboarded today. This is a dream come true".

Kittelfjäll, Sweden: Telemark skiing in the Swedish mountains of Lapland, making the most of the few hours of light each day. "Kittel" is the Swedish word for pot and "fjäll" means mountain, giving us a hint that the village Kittelfjäll lies in a valley surrounded by mountains. (Photographer: Hanna Parkman)
